

IDAHO RURAL HEALTH ASSOCIATION PROVIDES LEADERSHIP ON RURAL HEALTH ISSUES IN IDAHO THROUGH ADVOCACY, COMMUNICATION AND EDUCATION

The Idaho Rural Health Association (IRHA) is a nonprofit organization dedicated to improving the health of rural Idahoans. As the recognized voice for rural health issues in Idaho, IRHA provides a forum for health professionals, community members and healthcare organizations to work together to identify and find solutions to rural health problems.

IRHA's work is funded with member dues, conference fees, grants and sponsorships. Please join your neighbors and colleagues in supporting an organization that's shaping Idaho's rural healthcare system, today and tomorrow. Consider these benefits:

ADVOCACY. Influence public policy decisions that impact health in rural communities. Attend a legislative breakfast and read weekly legislative updates. Sign up to receive occasional call-to-action alerts.

COMMUNICATION. Receive timely updates on state and national rural health issues, including a quarterly Idaho Rural Health Association e-newsletter and National Rural Health Association news alerts.

EDUCATION. Attend the annual conference or regional forums on urgent health issues facing rural communities today. Follow the IRHA web announcements and calendar for the latest news and events.

COLLABORATION. Participate in a statewide network of rural health professionals and community partners, through an online member community, social networks and organized in-person events.

Please visit idahorha.org to join or renew. Student, individual and small or large organizational memberships are available.
