IRHA Provides Support for Jerome Area Clinicians on “How to work with Interpreters”

Class participants model the interpreter-patient-provider relationship.

The IRHA hosted a rural community forum in Jerome, Idaho, on May 5, 2009. The forum was a one-hour workshop for medical staff on working with healthcare interpreters and co-hosted by the State Office of Rural Health & Primary Care. The course was instructed by Christopher Dimmick, certified Spanish linguist and court interpreter, from Morales Dimmick Translation Services. Participants received continuing medical education credit from the Ada Canyon Medical Education Consortium and learned what to expect from interpreters and how to partner with interpreters to bridge cultural barriers to health-care.
